Lecturer position in French – Fall 2016

The Department of Humanities at Michigan Technological University seeks to appoint a Lecturer beginning August 15, 2017. Salary is competitive. Lecturers are appointed for two-year, renewable terms, and there is opportunity for promotion to Senior and Principal Lecturer.

Candidates should have a strong commitment to undergraduate instruction and enthusiasm for teaching French language and culture. The successful candidate will teach a combination of courses at the beginning, transitional, and intermediate levels; coordinate conversation and lab activities; and assist with advising, program publicity and recruitment. Candidates should have a demonstrated record of teaching excellence at the university level, evidence of continuing professional development, and native or near-native fluency in French. An ability to develop courses in French for the professions (Business, Engineering, Sciences) would be a plus. Candidates should have at least an M.A. at the time of appointment.

The Humanities Department offers Minors and International Minors in French, German, and Spanish, and a Minor in Diversity Studies. Our undergraduate programs include Scientific and Technical Communication; Communication, Culture, and Media Studies; English; and Liberal Arts. We offer an M.A. and Ph.D. in Rhetoric, Theory, and Culture. The department’s programs provide opportunities to teach and engage in research that benefits from an intellectually rich, multidisciplinary environment.
